Kyrsten Sinema (D-AZ)*

Background

Kyrsten Sinema was unsuccessful in her first two campaigns for public office -- the Phoenix City Council in 2001 and the state House in 2002. She finally won election to the House in 2004, at age 28, the same year she got her law degree and passed the bar. She served six years, including a stint as the assistant minority leader, and then moved up to the state Senate. She practiced law when the legislature wasn't in session. Sinema resigned from her state Senate seat early in 2012 to campaign for and eventually win the U.S. House seat in a newly drawn district that includes Tempe and parts of Phoenix, Mesa, Chandler, and Scottsdale.

Sinema was born to a middle-class Mormon family in Tuscon, and her parents divorced when she was young. Her mother remarried and they moved to Florida with her two siblings. For about three years, they were destitute, living on the charity of the Mormon Church and sleeping in an abandoned gasoline station.

Sinema excelled at school. At 14, she began taking classes at Okaloosa-Walton Junior College. She graduated from high school at age 16 and went to the church-owned Brigham Young University on a scholarship. With those community college credits in hand, she graduated two years later with a degree in social work.

Rick Scott (R-FL)*

Background

Rick Scott, a two-term Republican governor of Florida and was an early supporter of Donald Trump’s 2016 presidential bid and later received public encouragement from Trump to run for U.S. Senate.

Before entering politics, Scott was best known as a cofounder and one-time chief executive officer of the nation’s largest hospital operator, Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corporation. Scott helped assemble the company through a series of mergers and acquisitions in 1980s and 90s.

After joining the Navy and attending college with the help of the G.I. Bill, Scott started his first business venture by buying two Kansas City doughnut shops that his mother could manage, according to a bio on the governor’s office website.

Scott was born in Bloomington, Ill., and raised in Kansas City, Mo. He graduated from the University of Missouri-Kansas City with a bachelor’s degree in business administration and received a law degree from Southern Methodist University. He’s been married to his high-school girlfriend, Ann, for more than 45 years.

Marsha Blackburn (R-TN)

Background

Blackburn was born and raised in Laurel, Mississippi and earned a 4-H scholarship to Mississippi State University, where she sold books for the Southwestern Co. to pay her bills and played classical piano.

After moving to Tennessee, she founded her own marketing company, then founded the Williamson County Young Republicans at a time when the party was on the rise in suburban counties around strongly-Democratic Nashville. She ran for Congress in 1992, losing to Democratic Rep. Bart Gordon, before Gov. Donald Sundquist appointed her to head the Tennessee Film, Entertainment and Music Commission.

But Blackburn became a Sundquist antagonist after winning election to a Tennessee state Senate seat in 1998. Blackburn helped rally conservative opposition to Sundquist's 2001 effort to establish an income tax in Tennessee. Protesters helped scuttle the income tax; Sundquist settled for a 1-cent increase in the state sales tax. The following year, Blackburn got her chance to move up when U.S. Rep. Ed Bryant decided to run for an open Senate seat.
